II.

The Food of Angels of immortal kind,
Alone can be design'd
To Feast th'unbounded Appetite o'th' Mind.
To those bright Seats let me aspire
Where solid joys remain,
So firm they can sustain,
And stand the full Career of Chast Desire,
Th'Enjoyments we pursue
So hotly here below,
Are Charming Daphnes in the Chase
And (Daphne like) Transforming, Fool us in th' Em- brace!

Some of Martials Epigrams Translated and Paraphras'd.

Lib. 1. Epigr. IX.

FRom needless dangers timely to Retreat,
Speaks not our Courage small, but Prudence Great.

Thus Cato ſtill was foremoſt in the Fight,
Whilſt Vict'ry (tho at diſtance) was in ſight;
Yet oft the Unequal Battel he wou'd wave,
Wiſe in Retreat as in th'Engagement Brave.
Who of his Game, Advantage cannot make,
Is wiſe in plotting how to part the Stake.
Who pays his Blood for't, buys his Fame too dear;
I wou'd have Fame, but I'd enjoy it Here.
Who mingles Cypreſs with his Lawrel Wreath,
Is poor, and Debtor for his Fame to Death.

Lib. I. Epigr. XIV.

De Arriâ & Pæto.

WHen from her Breaſt Chaſt Arria did unſhea
The reeking Sword, & led the way to Dea
The bluſhing Steel to her Lov'd Lord ſhe gave,
And ſaid----Tho Wretched, let us ſtill be Brave!
Ah that I might prevent thy Fate with Mine:
At my own Breaſt I Bleed, but Smart in Thine.

Lib.